

Researching about overregularization of certain language rules in Japanese by children.
what is overregularization?:

In English

Young children learning English sometimes mistakenly use the rule for making regular past tense verbs to irregular conjugation verbs.

ex) go -> *goed

In Japanese

when making a "possible verb", a suffix "rare" attaches to the root verb if the root verb ends at a vowel. This rule isn't used when the root verb ends at a consonant.

But children in certain ages sometimes attach "rare" to root verbs regardless of the difference in the end of the verb.
